TAXONOMIC ATLAS
of the postabdominal structures
SARCOPHAGIDAE (Insecta, Diptera)
Vol. 1

ABSTRACT

The Taxonomic Atlas is the first graphic synthesis of his lifelong researches on the male postabdominal structures of the Sarcophagidae family. Using the microscopic analysis of organs with great importance in preserving and perpetuating the species, the author proves the superiority of their taxonomic value as compared to the other usual identification somatic characters. By the morphological details, the Atlas brings into stronger relief the symbols of taxons' systematic subordination, which implicitly establish the categories and ranks of a rational phylogenetic system.

The Taxonomic Atlas is the first attempt of its kind in the dipterologic literature, with its presentation of 419 species, belonging to 153 genera. Out of these 228 species and 60 genera had been previously established by the author himself.

INTRODUCTION

The taxonomy of brachycera dipterous of the Sarcophagidae family is now in a great impasse. Today, she is not strongly based on the classics groups of common characters of the external general morphology, that hide many polyphyletic units, or on the schematics and generalizing drawings of some male postabdominal structures. It is now clear that the majority of "external" characters is very variable and that the using of the schematics drawings is not sufficient for precise identifications. Therefore the method of the microscopic research of the genitalia requires a very detailed analysis of these structures and in especially of the phallosome, that display many constants morphological characteristics that have a great specific and generic value.

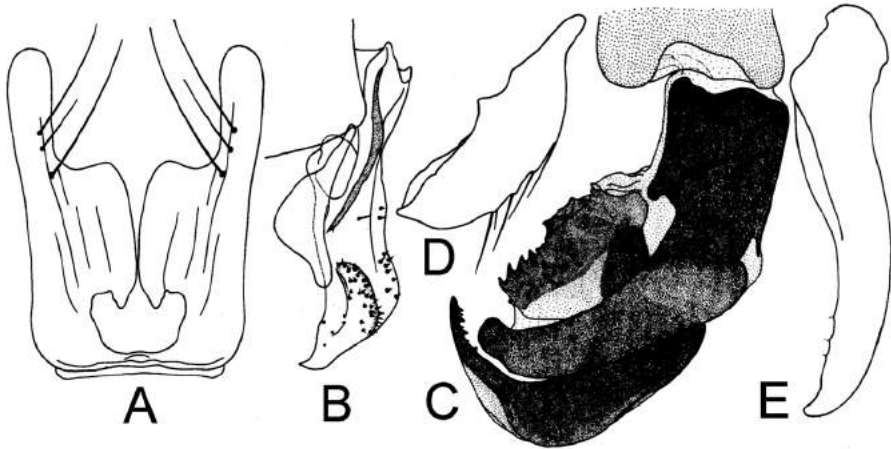

Our Taxonomic Atlas of the postabdominal structures of Sarcophagidae represents the first work of this kind for dipterologic literature and has as its implicit target the reestablishment of the modern and rational taxonomy of Sarcophagidae and the realization of a accurate determination mode, that eliminates the synonymies create artificially by false specialists or by unreal drawings.

In this atlas we have grouped 418 species, that belong to 153 kinds; among them, 228 species and 60 kinds were previously described and published before by us for the first time and 190 remaining species, belonging to 93 ancient genera, were studied and drawn in our work. Its fundamental conception consists in the essential definition of taxa based on the exact characters of the genitalia; on the ignorance of unjustified synonyms and graphically unproved; on the ignorance of females holotypes that cannot prove exactly their belonging to the same male species; on the ignorance of improvisations concerning the unproved “lectotypes” established without the definitor elements of the nomenclature or by an arbitrary selection of a specimen of an unidentified or heterogeneous group; on the ignorance of the priority of nomina nuda or species’ names without any concrete correspondent of the nomenclature (specimen, genitalia’s drawing etc.)

The bibliography of the Sarcophagidae’s family is very rich, so we have limited it to our works that contain our figures inserted in the atlas or where the validity of species mentioned is debated.
